1 A substance obtained in the form of a blue powder from plants of the genus Indigofera N.O. Leguminosæ, largely used as a dye-stuff.

It is produced by the decomposition of the glucoside Indican, which exists not merely in the indigo-plant, but in woad and various other plants. Its essential constituent is indigotin, $C_{16}H_{10}N_2O_2$. Varieties of Indigofera tinctoria contains indigo-red, indigo-brown, and some other glutinous matters (indigo-gluten)

The idioms of different languages differ widely in respect to indirect construction In English, indirect sentences are usually introduced by that or if, expressed or understood Thus, a speaker's actual words 'I will not go unless you use force', are reported indirectly, by the person addressed as 'he said [that] he would not go unless I used force', by a third party as 'he told X [that] he would not go unless he (X) used force' The question 'Do you know me?' becomes, in indirect narration, 'He asked me if I knew him', and 'he asked X if he knew him'

Indo-Germanic, a. [f Indo- 1 + Germanic, ad Gr indogermanisch.] = Indo-European a., Aryan a.

('Indo Germanic' is a term of late introduction than 'Indo-European', and of German origin, appearing first, so far as yet traced (see Gustav Meyer in Indoger Forschungen II 145-150), in Klaproth Asia Polyglotta, 1823. With Klaproth it seems to have been a kind of abbreviation of the expression used by him in an earlier work) 'the grove, Indisch Medisch Sclavisch Germanische Volkerkette, die vom Ganges bis an den Britannischen Inseln reicht', naming the two extreme members of the ethnological 'chain'. When Celtic was shown to be a still more extreme member of the same series, 'indogermanisch' lost its appropriateness, and some scholars tried to substitute indokeltisch, 'Indo Celtic', in Fr indo celtique, while others, as Bopp in his Vergleichende Grammatik, gave preference to the more comprehensive indoeuropäisch, the equivalents to which, Indo European, indo européen, were also favoured in Great Britain and France But the employment of 'indoger manisch' on the title page of Pott's Etymologische Forsch ungen auf dem Gebiete indogermanischen Sprachen (1833-36) popularized this term in Germany, whence under the influence of German textbooks, or of teachers trained in Germany, it has come into English use, and is now probably more used than 'Indo European')

10 Elect and Magnetism The action of inducing or bringing about an electric or magnetic state in a body by the proximity (without actual contact) of an electrified or magnetized body

The terms induct and induction were originally employed apparently to avoid the use of terms involving any theory of the nature of the action involved The phenomena of communication is now held to be, as in the case of other forms of energy, the intervening ether

Electrodynamic, voltaic, induction, the production of an electric current induced currently by the influence of another independent electric current Electromagnetic induction, the production of a state of magnetic polarity in a body, iron or round which an electric or galvanic current passes or the generation of an electric current by the action of a magnet (the latter called by Faraday, more properly, magneto-electric induction). Electrostatic induction, the production of an electrical charge upon a body by the influence of a neigh bouring body charged with statical electricity, as exemplified in Volta's electrophorus Magnetic induction, the production of magnetic properties in iron or other substances when placed in a magnetic field, as when a bar of soft iron is magnetized by a neighbouring magnet Mutual induction the reaction of two electric circuits upon each other self induction, the reaction of different parts of the same circuit upon one another

1811 SIR H DAVY Chem Philos I 2 To produce a succession of effects both conductors must be brought into bodies connected with the ground which gives the opposite state, in consequence of what may be called induction
1830 HERSCHEL Stud Nat Phil 329 The communication of magnetism from the earth to a magnetic body, or from one magnetic body to another, is performed by a process to which the name of induction has been given
1832 FARADAY Exper Res § 1 in Phil Trans 125 The power which electricity of ten sion possesses of causing an opposite electrical state in its vicinity has been expressed by the general term induction which as it has been received into scientific language may also with propriety be used in the same general sense to express the power which electric currents may possess of inducing any particular state upon matter in their immediate neighbourhood Ibid § 58 129, I propose to call the agency thus exerted by ordinary magnets, magnetic induction or magnetic induction § 59 The only difference which powerfully strikes the attention as existing between volta ele tric and magneto electric induction, is the suddenness of the former, and the sensible time required by the latter
1870 TYNDALL Lect Electr 14 This forcible separation of the two fluids of a neutral conductor by the mere proximity of an electrified body, is called electric induction Bodies in this state are also said to be electrified by influence
1892 S P THOMPSON Dynamo Elect Mach (ed 4) 83 We know that every electric current possesses a property sometimes called 'electric inertia', sometimes called 'self induction', by virtue of which it tends to go on, and that it is in the current's own magnetic field that this inertia of self induction resides Ibid 102 Mutual induction between adjacent parts is of enormous importance in alternate current machines

1852 Mowbray & Morr Dict Chem III 815 When H and Cl are mixed in equal volumes and exposed to sunlight a measurable time elapses before chemical change begins. Bunsen and Roscoe, who examined this phenomenon regard the mixture as resisting chemical change and they used the term induction to express the gradual overcoming of this resistance. The term has also been used by Wright, who noticed a similar phenomenon in the reduction of metallic oxides by CO and H.

13 attrib and Comb., as (sense 10) induction apparatus, current, machine, shock, spark, also induction-balance, an electrical apparatus so contrived that the currents induced in the secondary wires of two induction-coils balance each other, induction-bridge, a form of induction balance arranged on the principle of a Wheatstone's bridge, induction-coil, an electrical apparatus for producing electric currents by induction consisting of two separated coils of wire generally surrounding a soft iron core, the primary coil being connected with an external source of electricity, and having an arrangement for causing the electric current to vary in intensity, the effect of which is to produce a current of different character in the other or secondary coil, (sense 3) induction-pipe, the pipe through which the live steam is introduced into the cylinder of a steam engine, induction-port, the opening by which steam passes from the steam-chest into the cylinder, induction valve, the valve which controls the passage of steam into the cylinder

1855-7 H M Noad Man Electr II 728 The 'induction apparatus' as at present constructed by M. Ruhmkoff is shown in Fig. 195. 1879 D. E. Hughes in Proc. R. Soc. XXIX 56 M. Dove constructed an 'induction balance,' wherein two separate induction coils, each having its primary and secondary coils, were joined together in such a manner that the induced current in one coil was made to neutralize the induced current in the opposite coil, thus forming an induction balance, to which he gave the name of differential inductor. Ibid. I have also used a perfect induction balance which allows us to obtain direct comparative measures of the force or disturbance produced by the introduction of any metal or conductor. 1889 Fleming Alternate Current Transformer 247 Lord Rayleigh found it more convenient to slightly alter the arrangement of the induction balance

B and I are a battery and interrupter, T is a telephone in the bridge. 1855-9 Noad Man Electr II 728 In 1851, Mr. Ruhmkorff first brought the 'induction coil' to a far greater degree of perfection than it had hitherto attained by paying the greatest possible attention to the insulation of the secondary wire. 1876 Preece & Sivewright Telegraphy 62 Each globe or tube ought to be tested from time to time with an induction-coil, or some other generator of electricity of high potential. 1896 *Allbutt's Syst. -ine, suffix 1, forming adjs, repr L -inus, -na, -inum, added to names of persons, animals, or material things and to some other words, with the sense 'of or 'pertaining to', 'of the nature of', represented in Fr by -in masc, -ine fem, in Eng now usually by -ine, formerly and still exceptionally by -in Examples are L. adulterinus adulterine, asininus asinine, aquatilis aquatine, caninus canine, divinus divine, femininus feminine, genuinus genuine, libertinus libertine, marinus marine, masculinus masculine, supinus supine, in some cases with blending of a previous suffix, as clandestinus clandestine, intestinus intestine, multitūdinus multitudinous, respertinus vespertine Also names proper names, as Alpinus Alpine, Capitolinus Capitoline, Latinus Latin (formerly Latine), Saturninus Saturnine, Tarentinus Tarentine On the pattern of these, adjs have continued to be freely formed in the Romance langs and in English, as in Tyrtæus, Caroline, Florentine, Socrine, and the termination is now greatly used in Natural History, in forming adjs with or without L type As on the name of genera, as aurine, cacurine, bovine, caprine, equine, feline, hystrine, murine, passerine In these Natural History adjs the pronunciation is (-ain) usually unstressed, but in other words it is very various, depending upon the length of time the word has been in English, the channel through which it came, and the stress and other circumstances of divine, supine (-ain), marine (-ēin), feminine, genuine (-in), aquiline, bovine, leonine, alkaline (-ain), and see the history of the individual words

-ine, suffix 2, forming adjs repr L -inus, a Gr -ινος, from names of minerals, plants etc, or (in a few words) of L origin, as crystalline crystalline, Eng, the same sense and the same forms, as INE1, as adamantin adamantine, amethystinus amethystine, coralinus coralline, crystallinus crystalline, hyacinthinus hyacinthine pistinus pristine The etymological and historical pronunciation is (-in), e g (pri stin), (ĕedămas tin), but, from the spelling -ine, and the attraction of words in INE1, there is now a strong tendency to lengthen the i in crystalline (-əin), etc

-ine, suffix 3, forming sbs, repr L -ina, L ina, Gr -ινη, forming feminine titles, as in Gr φοινιξ, L heroïna, F héroïne heroine With this the Gr landgrafin, markgrafin, Du landgravin, markgravin (the suffix of which is -ing the same as -EVE 1), have fallen together in French and in Eng, as landgravine, margravine.

-ine, suffix[1] forming sbs., repr F -ine (-ain), L -ina (-anus), in origin identical with -INE[2]. In L., -ina formed feminine abstracts from verbs, as rapina rapine, ruina ruin, and from agent-nouns, as disciplina discipline, doctrina doctrine, medicina medicine, also shs. from other sources, as fascina fascine, retina resin, urina urine. The adjs in -inus, ina were also used subst., as in concubinus, ina concubine, lupinus lupine, and esp in proper names, as Aulobinus Antonine, Augustinus Augustine, Constantinus Constantine, Crespinus Crispin, Justinus Justin, Agrippina, Constantina, etc The English form of those in -ina (through Fr, or on the Fr type) is -ine, occasionally in early words reduced to -in, those in -inus give F and Eng -in, but in Eng often -ine

Formations of this type were multiplied in late L and Romanic, e g famina famine, F routine, in Romanic this suffix (It, Sp -ino, -ina, F -in, -ine) is greatly used in forming names of derived substances, similative appellations, diminutives, etc Many of these have come into English, in the F form -ine (-in), which has consequently become a formative element, freely used in forming the names of derivative products, and of things supposed to be derived from, resemble, imitate, or commemorate those from which they are named, and thus in the trade names of new varieties of fabrics, cosmetics, patent medicines, and proprietary articles generally, e g denitine, ossine, nectarine, brilliantine, grenadine, albertine, tootsine, etc Feminine personal names of Romanic origin in -ina sometimes retain that form, but often take -ine (-in or -en) after Fr, as Caroline, Catherine, Ernestine, Josephine

-ine, suffix[2] Chem, in origin an offshoot of -INE[3], as occurring in the names of some derived substances see GELATIN, INE At first used systematically in forming names of extractive principles and chemical derivatives of various kinds, also, in the English names given early in the 19th century to the four elements chlorine, fluorine, iodine, bromine (in F chlore, fluor, iode, brome) In all these, but especially in the names of extractive principles, the ending -ine was by some reduced to -in, thus gelatin or gelatyn, aconitin, or aconitin, chlorine or chlorin In recent systematic nomenclature the two forms have been differentiated, -ine being now used (1) in forming names of alkaloids and basic substances, as aconitine, cocaine, nicotine, strychnine, etc, which are thus distinguished from names of neutral substances, proteids, etc, in -in (see -IN[3]), and (2) in Hofmann's systematic names of hydrocarbons of the form C_nH_{2n-2}, as ethine or acetylene, C_2H_2, propine or allylene, C_3H_4, etc These latter are not much used In the names of the elements, and some other substances, not belonging to any of the classes named, -ine is retained (though chlorin, fluorin, etc, appear in some American books) In popular and commercial use, the ending -ine is still current in the names of some substances for which systematic nomenclature requires -in see -IN[3]

-ine has been used by some authors to form the names of minerals, but in later systematic use, esp by Dana, this is changed, in names of species into -ite, thus chalcosine, erythrine, in Dana chalcosite, erythrite

4 Astron. a Deviation from uniformity in the motion of a heavenly body.

The older astronomers reckoned four inequalities, two common to planets and the moon, and two confined to the moon. First Inequality that which is due to the eccentricity of the orbit, and the acceleration of motion at a planet's perihelion or the moon's perigee. Second Inequality that which arises from the obliquity of the direction of the planet's motion to the transverse line of its orbit. = EVECTION. Third Inequality = VARIATION of the moon. Fourth Inequality that due to the more rapid motion of the moon when the earth is in perihelion, also called Annual Inequality or Annual Equation. Later astronomers have discovered several others, as Parallactic Inequality (see quot 1867–76), Periodic Inequality, the comparatively short recurring orbital perturbation due to the attraction of another body, as the great inequality of Jupiter and Saturn.

1690 LEYBOURN Curs. Math. 758 The second Inequality of the Moon is explained by a little Circle. 1726 tr. Gregory's Astron. I 427 By any single observation of a Planet to clear it of its Second Inequality, and find out its Distance from the Sun. 1728 PEMBERTON Newton's Philos. 228 Sir Isaac Newton has computed the very quantity of many of the moon's inequalities. 1828 *Encycl. Newton on the theory of gravitation. Ibid. The Annual Inequality arises from the sensible difference in the disturbing influence exerted by the Sun on the Moon, according as the latter is in that part of its orbit nearest to, or most removed from the Sun. Ibid. The Secular Acceleration of the Moon's mean motion. This inequality was detected by Halley in 1693. Ibid. 81 Hansen elucidated, a few years ago, two other inequalities in the Moon's motion, due the one directly and the other indirectly, to the influence of Venus.

5 Math a The relation between quantities that are unequal in value or magnitude. Sign of inequality, either of the signs > ('is greater than') and < ('is less than'). b An expression of this relation, consisting of two unequal quantities connected by either of these signs distinguished from equation.

1875 IODHUNTER Algebra (ed 7) II § 674 If the signs of all the terms of an inequality be changed the sign of inequality must be reversed.

1 The action or process of inferring, the drawing of a conclusion from known or assumed facts or statements, esp in Logic, the forming of a conclusion from data or premisses, either by inductive or deductive methods, reasoning from something known or assumed to something else which follows from it, =ILLATION Also (with pl), a particular act of inferring; the logical form in which this is expressed

In English, the word appears first in the general sense, not as a term of formal logic. In logical treatises it is found first applied to the deductive process of the syllogism, and its conclusion (mediate inference); its application to the inferring of a conclusion from a single proposition by conversion, opposition, permutation, or the like (immediate inference), and its use in the logic of induction (inductive inference) appear later, and are not accepted by all logicians. On the other hand, some restrict the term to induction, and deny that either a syllogism or an immediate inference can properly be called an inference

If the latter, the inference is inductive, if the former deductive. If the deductive inference contain only a single premiss, it is immediate, if it contain two premisses, and the conclusion be drawn from these jointly, it is mediate, and is called a syllogism. 1874 STUBBS Const Hist I. i. § 3 This is not a matter of inference. It is a recorded fact of history

A adj

1 Gram The name of that form of a verb which expresses simply the notion of the verb without predicating it of any subject Usually classed as a 'mood', though strictly a substantive with certain verbal functions, esp those of governing an object, and being qualified by an adverb

(Called by Quintilian and Priscian infinitus modus, by Donatus infinitus tempus because it has not definite persons and numbers, whence it has also been called by some, impersonativus and enigmativus) In the short grammar of Dionysius Thrax (B.C. 80), it is called ἀπαρέμφατος, i e without modification of sense, unmodified)

In modern Eng, the infinitive was the simple unmodified form of the verb, agreeing in this respect with the imperative, and (except in the verb be), with the first pers. sing. and the whole plural, of the present indicative. In OE, the infinitive had (in the nom acc case) the suffix an, MF -en, it had also a dative form in anne, ME -ane, -en, -e The latter is sometimes fancifully called by modern grammarians, the gerundial or gerundic infinitive as possessing, in some of its functions the Latin gerund or gerundive (It answers more to the Latin supine) The OE nom -anne infinitive is the source of the more less frequent simple infinitive, as in 'we can him cunne', (they need not come) The dative infinitive is formally the source of the infinitive with to, and function only the origin of this as such (see the want to go, the fight to maintain, purpose 'it was easy to do' Gerundial infinitive) but to is now prefixed also to the nom acc infinitive where OE had the simple form in -an, as in 'I desire us to believe', 'the likes to do it' See to 1 b, pp

It influenza has the various senses of Eng influence, but has, besides, developed (app from the notion of 'astral' or 'occult influence') that of 'visitation', 'outbreak', of any epidemic disease which assails many people at the same time and place (e g influenza di catarro, influenza di febbre maligne), a sense known as early as 1504, hence, absolutely, 'an epidemic' in 1743 applied specifically to the epidemic (called also la grippe) which then raged in Italy, and shortly after in Europe generally, and for which the Italian word (anglicized in pronunciation) became the English specific name.]
A specific, febrile, zymotic disorder, highly contagious, and occurring for the most part in widespread epidemics Its symptoms and sequelæ are extremely variable, but generally include rapid prostration and severe catarrh The mortality is not high in proportion to the numbers attacked
The term was often applied loosely to any severe catarrh of the respiratory mucous membrane, esp to a 'cold in the head' with running at the nose, sometimes called in influenza It was also frequent in the winter of 1889-90, between the epidemic of 1847-8, and that which began in 1889, during which period no true influenza visited Great Britain

Infourne, infowrme, obs. ff. Inform v.

Infra- infrā, prefix, repr. I. infra adv. and prep. 'below, underneath, beneath' (in med. I. also 'within'), used in numerous recent formations, chiefly adjectival

This use of infra is scarcely a Latin one, though infra fortunam 'situated below the fortune' occurs in a passage in Cicero (Lewis and Short), and infrahabitudinem 'lying within the walls in Gregory of Tours (Du Cange). Its recent development follows the analogy of other prepositions, it is regularly opposed to supra, sometimes to super: the second element ought strictly to be one of Latin origin, but it is not always so.

A In prepositional relation to the sb represented in second element

1 Denoting 'below', 'beneath' (i. e 'lower down than'), in respect of local situation or position. Chiefly in terms which are the adjectival representatives of phrases in which infra would be followed by se in the accusative, e. g. infraaxillary 'that is infra axillam, below the axilla or axil', infra mammary, 'that is infra mammas, below the breasts' The majority of these are anatomical terms. In a few cases the second element appears to be a sb. as infraclavicle. More rarely infra- is simply prefixed to an adj., as infra-red, infra-acid

2 Denoting 'below', 'beneath' in respect of status or condition, as infrahestial 'lower than bestial', 'beneath the brutes' In these, infra- seems to be directly prefixed to an adjective

3 Denoting 'within' (as in med. L.), as inframercurial, infrastoral (see these words below) here the formation is as in 1

B In attributive or adverbial relation to the second element 'lower', 'inferior', 'under-', as infraconstructus, infraposition, etc.

Such compounds can be formed at will when required, the following are the principal ones in use For the etymology of the second element see the simple words Axillary, Barbial, Cortical, etc

In most of these compounds, practice varies as to the use of the hyphen, the hyphen is usual when the compound is new, or more or less of a nonce word, e. g. infra-red, infra-humun, infra-natural, but it is usually omitted in recognized terms, as inframaxillary, infrascapular, except when the following element begins with a vowel, as in infra-axillary infra-inguinal, infra-orbital It may however be used for the nonce, whenever emphasis is placed either on the prefix, or on the composite character of the word

Infralapsarian (infralæpsēᵊ·riăn), sb and a Theol [f L infrā under beneath + laps us fall + -arian, as in Trinitarian etc]

A sb A term applied in the 17th c to Calvinists holding the view that God's election of some to everlasting life was consequent to his prescience of the Fall of man or that it contemplated man as already fallen, and was thus a remedial measure opposed to SUPRALAPSARIAN

The Supralapsarian view makes Predestination anterior or logically superior to the Fall and views the creation, fall, and saving of some, as parts of God's eternal purpose Infralapsarian is generally used as synonymous with SUBLAPSARIAN the earlier and in English writers the more usual term But some distinguish the two, associating Sublapsarian with the view that the Fall was foreseen and Infralapsarian with the view that it was permitted by God

-ing[1], suffix forming verbal derivatives, origin ally abstract nouns of action, but subsequently de veloped all the various directions of use in OFris -inge, -enge, -ige, -ege, OS -unga (MLG and MDu -inge, Du -ing), OHG -unga, -ange (MHG -unge, Ger -ung), ON -ung and -ing, not known in Gothic —O leut type * -ungō (and ? * -ingō) stem , not identified outside Teutonic In OE the more usual form was -ung (inflected -unge, but -ing also was frequent), esp in derivatives from original ja verbs (see COMPN, Altwests Gramm II 21, 22) In early ME , -ung rapidly died out, being scarcely found after 1250 and -ing (in early ME -inge) became the regular form In later ME , -yng was a frequent scribal variant

1 The original function of the suffix was to form nouns of action, as a tuning AARING, from to tune to take the proper pressing, boring, a clapping, -ing CHEATING, ridding, ung CHIDING, ecioppun, CHEPPING, gebinig EBBING, fedung FEEDING, gadering GATHERING These substantives were originally abstract, but even in OE they often came to express a completed action, a process, habit, or art, as handsuing, -ung BLESSING, learnung LEARN ING, leadung LEADING, weddung BETHAL, wrixlung and then admitted a plural, sometimes they be came concrete, as in bedding, earthing dwelling, offung OFFERING, rynning rennet, LARNING † During the ME period all these uses received greater development, and in the 14th c the formation became established, esp in the gerundial use (see 2 below), as an actual or possible derivative of every verb By later extension, formations of the same kind have been analogically made from substantives (see c, g, below), and, by ellipsis, from adverbs, as innings, offing, outing, homing (home coming), while nonce words in -ing are formed freely on words or phrases of many kinds, e g oh text-hearing, hoo hooing, pishoing, to hoing (calling oh !, hoo ! hoo !, etc.) hee-hawjedoing (saying 'how do you do?'), 'I do not believe in all this puttying' having pints of beer

In current use, verbal substantives in -ing may be grouped as to their sense, under the following heads

a Nouns of continuous action or existence, as raining, falling, flying, kicking, brave, pushing, running, sleeping, speaking, standing, as they are distinguished from verbs in the form as the verb stands he is ringing a full chime, a pinch, a run, a sh ot, a step etc., in that the latter denote only momentary or short duration, having a definite beginning, and end as contrasted with a verbal plural, while the sbs in -ing imply indefinite duration without reference to beginning or end and take no plural Of a bird singing, warbling is continuous there is no break, but not many of it

b The notion of action may be limited to that of a single or particular occasion, as a thanksuing, a wedding, a meeting, a greeting, a reckoning, an outing As thus used, the sb takes a plural "three long sittings

c The notion of simple action passes insensibly into that of a process, practice, habit, or art, which may or may not be regarded as in actual exercise, e g reading and writing, are now common acquirements so dreaming, singing, fencing, smoking, swimming Words of this kind are also formed directly from sbs which are the names of things used, or persons engaged, in the action such are balloon ing, blacksmithing, canalling, climbing, coaching (coach ing), fighting, fowling, guard ing, hopping (hop-picking), hunting (gathering hurts), mooning, mutining, sniping, buccaneering, cattering, soldiering, and the like d Hence often transferred to the concrete or material accompaniment or product of the action or process, as "the paper was covered with weaving", so binding, blacking, dripping, dubbing, lightning, sewing, stitching etc

e Hence as the designation of a material thing in which the action or its result is concreted or embodied, as a weaving was affixed to the wall , so a carving a half landing, shaving, sounding (of a river), etc A peculiar instance is a being, one wherein the attribute of being or existence is exemplified, now usually a living being

f Often used as the collective designation of the sub stance or material employed in an action or process as clothing, that with which one is clothed saddling, carpeting, ceiling, edging, flooring, gearing, gilding, housing, lining, rigging, roofing, shipping, tackling, tiling, trimming, etc

g In the preceding group there is often a sb of the same form as the verb, with which the noun in -ing comes to be closely associated, as in bed clothes clothes clothing, floor, flooring, sail, sailing, ship shipping, etc Hence true formations in -ing from substantives without a corresponding verb, esp in industrial and commercial language, with the sense of a collection or indefinite mass of the thing or of its material, as ashlaring, coping cornicing, cottering, cuttering, piping scaffolding tubing, tuggings, quilting, tacking, shutting, shuttering, tickings, transoming

h. In some words the concrete sense -ing as exclusively or preferentially, in the plural -ings e g carvings, clothings, sweepings, tidings, hangings, innings moorings, trappings

Other exceptional or irregular uses of -ing are discussed under the individual words

The old sb in -ing often forms the second element in a compound The first element may be a qualifying adj which in the finite tenses of the sb formerly stood either before or after it, but in the vbl sbs and adjs regularly preceded, and thus came to be used with these thus them and go or go out came out a-ging, now out going, out outgoing so down sitting, in sitting, in sitting off sitting, up rising, well doing, ill doing In the vbl sb, the direct, indirect, or adverbial object of the verb, as book keeping, child bearing, class drilling, house keeping, sheep shearing, sea faring, hand writing, type setting, or merely a subjective genitive, as cock crowing, sun rising

The vbl sb often stands in an attributive relation to another sb, as in the building trade, = the trade of building, drawing materials = materials for drawing, singing lessons = lessons in singing, when such expressions are established expressions, they are regularly hyphened, and pro nounced with the stress on the first element, as in bowling Green, carving knife, dancing master, dining house, feeding trough, fencing lesson, stock in trade, sewing house, sweeping brush, stumbling block, spinning wheel, thanking song, turning lathe, walking stick etc But, when the classification is only occasional, and the vbl sb stands in a simple attributive relation to the following sb, it approaches in function to an adjective, and is usually left to be combined in the ordinary way (1868) used adjectivally The sense generally deter mines the nature of the collocation thus, drawing lessons are not lessons in drawing, but lessons in drawing, a painting file, not a file that paints but a file of painting, a drinking cup, not a cup that drinks, but a cup for drinking with A walking leaf is a leaf that walks, but a walking stick is a stick for walking But in some cases in which the second element denotes a machine, agency, or agent, it is difficult to say whether the sense of the vbl sb used attributively or the present pple used adjectivally, e g a sitting tool, a hunting thief, an advertising agency In accordance with general analogy such combinations are, as a rule, treated in this dictionary as attrib uses of the vbl sb

2 The most notable development of the vbl sb in -ing is its use as a gerund, i e a substantive with certain verbal functions, particularly those of being qualified by an adverb instead of an adjective, and of governing an object like a verb e g the habit of speaking slowly (= loose speaking), the hope of coming back speedily (= a speedy return), he practises writing = the writing of books, articles, essays, he is building himself a house (= the building of a house for himself), after having written a letter (= the completion of the writing of a letter

This gerundial use is peculiar to English, of which it is a characteristic and most important feature, it was unknown to OE and early ME.

The first traces of it are best noted in see R Blume Ursprung und Entwicklung des Gerundiums im Englischen, Bremen 1880 occur c 1340 in the Ayenbite of Inwit and in the writings of Rich and Rolle of Hampole in the separation of the adv in downcoming, downfalling, ingoing, etc, and the placing of it after the vbl sb, coming down, falling down, going on = downcoming, downfalling, ingoing, fall down go on This was soon extended to adverbs and adverbial phrases generally, so that it has now established that any vbl sb could, like the vbl sb belonging, take an adverbial qualification In other respects the vbl sb first retained its construction e g 1330 HAMPOLE Prose Treat (E E T S) 2 "all manere of outthelaw esynge of ydlenes and of vnprofytabylle thynges" will put aghte it

A generation later, the vbl sb is found with a verbal regimen, thus 1377 LANGL P Pl B xix 186 Confessoun and knowleching, and craftes by mercy shulde amende vs Ibid xix 74 with outen mercy askynge This gerundial construction is very frequent in Wyclif's Bible (1388) and it is significant that he regularly uses it in translating the Latin gerund, while he retains the original subjunctive construction in rendering the Latin gerundive thus, Exod xix 1 "the thridde monith of the goyng of Israel out [egressionis] of the lond of Egipte" but Ibid xxiv 30 "in resey ynge [suscipiendi] the biddyng of him", Mark xi 15 "power of heelynge [curandi] seknesse, and of castynge out [ejiciendi] fendis" Imitation of the Latin gerund was thus up an established fact in the development of the Eng gerundial use of the vbl sb Another influence may have been the literal rendering of the Fr gerund (identical in form with the pr pple) after en, as in en tenant, L in tenendo, in coming,

The full development of the gerundial use before 1400 led necessarily to an indefinite increase of vbl sbs in -ing, since every verb now had one as an actual or potential dependent In conjunction with the formal identity of gerund and pres pple (see no 2) it led about a later date to the introduction of gerundial expressions for the perfect and future tenses, for the pr. ns was not corresponding in form with the pples he ... ame tense and voices. Thus SIDNEY Arcadia 1 968 with ut of consideration in not having demanded thus h' SPENSER F Q III iv 50 'feare of being fowly shent, HERB Tri Thal 1 xi 8 2 'by being unto God united, KS Ivo Cent i iii 16 'in having knowne no treasure is youth, I empeel iii 119 'I will weepe for having tried you, Iliad 'The news of his being about to return e, instead of having been slain by the enemy' it, although the gerundial use was fully established by t it was a long time before it was distinctly separated t the earlier substantival use The vbl sb has the (or valent) before it, and of (or equivalent) after it, and has neither A good example of the two construc vside by side, and with identical sense, occurs in HOOKER I Eccly 'Concerning the Meanes of procuring Unity i must bew are, that in the procuring of Religious ty, they doe not', etc But, down to the 17th c mixed structures were frequent, in which the word in the full adjectival qualification with cverbal reasnon or con ely, and adverbial qualification with the construction of o followed by of' thus SIDNEY Arcadia 1 xvi 'to go to a sodain shrinking them', Hist 1 xii 'to, by well choosing, of your comin ualment ne gerund still retains some feature of the vbl sb ve of admitting, of preceding possessive case or possessive noun, as in 'after John's behaving so strangely' 'upon readily granting it' In the literary English this distinction is regularly retained with a pronoun and very rally with a single personal substantive, but, with ces of things, and phrases general or involved denomi ns, the sign of the possessive began to be dropped ady by 1600, thus SHAKS Macb I iii 83 'By a sinnce her choppie finger laying Upon her skinne lips.' other treatment is now possible in such constructions n default of one or other being accepted', on the general his staff upon ring, 'in the event of your expectation being at once realized', in consequence of much soon ng fallen', and, in current spoken English the 1 is monly omitted with all nouns, thus DICKENS Pickwick I xii 148 'I insist upon Miss Sharp appearing', when as sharp s' would now sound preferable or archaic Even nnoun standing before the gerund is put in the objective, llatest speech, and, when the pronoun is emphatic, is common in ordinary colloquial English, thus HOOD Diamond I 242 'Papa did not care about them learn , — Newcomes 'But who ever heard of them eating wh' CRAIK Romance of Lock (1866) II 349 'What is xcuse for him beating you' 'So 'What is the use of speaking?

uch constructions the objective sb or pronoun seems and in simple opposition to the gerund, the two forming nd of combined object of the preposition, reminding us ne Greek infinitive with an accusative after a prep, as στα τὸ παραδόθηναι τὸν Ἰωάννην 'after John being de ed up But in Eng there has probably been analogy influence from the construction of the pres pple of, for nce, 'John was digging potatoes', 'Who saw John ing potatoes?', and 'Who ever heard of John (John's) ing potatoes?'

In a few ME writers, esp in Wyclif, the form inge, -ynge, also appears for the Dative Inive, OE enne, MI -ene, -en Thus Luke 23 'who it was of hem that was to doynge thanne] thing' John vi 72 'this was to ayenge [traditione] him' In its origin this ease of phonetic confusion, the OE enne, founded with ende, had, like the pres pple -ING 2), passed through -inde to inge, -ynge it it is possible that Wyclif, in using this form to render L. future participle, actually identified it in sense with gerund, understanding the first quotation above as if tho it was of them that was [destined] to the doing of thing, which he contructed to the gerund of construc 'to doynge it is thing'

ng 2, suffix of the present participle, and of , thence derived, or so formed, an alteration he ordinary OE -ende - OFris OS -and, MHG -t (-ent i, -ant i, MHG -end e, Ger -end), -and s (Sw -ande, Da -ende), Goth -and s, -a, = I -ent, Gr -ovτ, Skt -ant ready, in later OE, the ppl -ende was often kened to -inde, and this became the regular thern form of the ending in Early ME From end of the 12th c there was a growing tendency confuse -inde, phonetically or scribally, with -e, this confusion is specially noticeable in MSS. itten by Anglo-Norman scribes in the 13th c The l result was the predominance of the form -inge, its general substitution for -inde in the 14th c, tough in some works, as the Kentish Ayenbite of o, the pple still regularly has -inde In Mid l English -ende is frequent in Gower, and oc. tional in Midland writers for some time later, the southern -inge, -ynge, -ing, favoured by ucer, Hoccleve, and Tydyate, soon spread over Midland area, and became the Standard English n The Northern dialect, on the other hand, in gland and Scotland, retained the earlier ending the form -ande, -and, strongly contrasted with verbal sb in -ynge, ing (-yne, ene) At the sent day the two are completely distinct in Northberland and the Southern Counties of Scotland, tough the general mutescence of final d, and the nge of -ng to -n, make the difference in most es only a vowel one e g 'a-skeegin' hurd', 'the gin (-en) o' the burds', but 'a gaan baurn' (a ng child) 'afore gangin' hame'

As inge was the proper coding of the vbl sb (sb 1), it has naturally suggested itself to many that the levelling of the pres pple under the same form must have been the result of some overlap, confusion of the functions or constructions of the two formations But investigation has discovered no trace of any such functional or construction al contract in Early ME, and it is now generally agreed that the confusion was, in its origin, entirely phonetic On the other hand, the fact that the forms had, by the 14th c, be come identical may have been a factor in the development of the gerundial use of the vbl sb, which began then, and it has certainly influenced the subsequent development of the compound gerundial phrase being made, having spoken, having been made, being about to go etc, which have the same form as the corre-sponding participles (see sb 1 2) The identity of form of pr. pple and gerund probably also assisted the process whereby, at a later date such a construction as the king went a-hunting formerly was to go a-hunting was shortened to 'he kin, went hunting, the latter word being then taken as the participle and thus to the shortening of the adverb a-building, into 'was building' to the adverb a-building, in which a building is taken as a pple it must be explained as a pple passive being built In this case it must be a child-usage of the unique restrictions of the gerund and the tendency of the vbl sb when used attributively to run together with the pr. pple used objectively, as in at sing. tools, a dry ing cellar, etc

The termination -ing is that of the pres pple, whether used as part of the verb, or adjectively, also of adjectives of participial origin or formation, as blessing, charming, disagreeing, freebooting, non-jurring, hulking, lumping, straggling, swinging, and of prepositions or adverbs of participial origin as concerning, during, excepting, notwithstanding, pending, touching

As with the vbl sb (1a), words of participial form and use may be formed on other parts of speech or on phrases, e g buccaneering adventurers sailors go-heing lustily, hero ally-doing acquaintances

-ing3, suffix forming derivative masculine sbs with the sense of 'one belonging to' or 'of the kind of', hence 'one possessed of the quality of', and also as a patronymic = 'one descended from, a son of', and as a diminutive Found in the same form, or as -ung, in the other Teutonic langs Of examples are ayling ATHELNEY cyning KING Offing 'the far child, Sigeing fugitive, Aldring whoremonger, also the patronymics Ælfwealding son of Æthelwulf, Legbrihting, Cerdicing, Wodening, etc (OE Chron anno 855) Aldering, etc (Andrew Gosp Luke iii 38), and the gentilic names Hocsingas, Islingas, Centingas (men of Kent), with the Scriptural Gadites, Gebalites, Moabites, Ammonites, etc. This suffix also formed names of nouns, as pending, penning PENNY, scilling SHILLING, and of fractional parts, as feorþing quarter, FARTHING, teoþung, ung tenth, TITHING so ON þriþjung-r third part, thriding RIDING (of Yorkshire)

Among words of various ages with this suffix are berthing, bunting, gelding, golding, Kerning, knitting sweeting, whiting, wilding See also the compound suffix -LING (-l + -ing)

The origin of a term of alchemy (as this evidently was) in Arab., is not a priori probable.] Also, the only recorded sense of † Ingot (which appears frequently in 15th–16th c.) is—not sense 2, while the English ingot before 1 28 is known only in Chaucer and Spenser: this makes it difficult, unless it is assumed that sense 2 was also in English during these two centuries, though not yet found. The two assumptions as to the origin of sense 1 (mould) are not (as regards the sense) from in adv., and gote, ancient people of OE. geótan, Mk. gietan, 3 to gieten mod. dial. gett to pour, to cast (metal). Here there is the difficulty that the pa. pple. goten was conformed to the rest of the vb., as geten, gheten, gotten, before the 14th c., the hard g might then have been softened in an old variant, and, in the dern. sense gote, 'water-course, gutter drain', but even in that case we should have expected an original final vowel, giving ME. ingote. The existing evidence is thus too contradictory for any certain conclusion.]

2 Law A judicial process by which one who is threatening to invade or has invaded the legal or equitable rights of another is restrained from commencing or continuing such wrongful act or commanded to restore matters to the position in which they stood previously to his action
Injunctions were formerly obtained by writ but now by a judgement or order. They were originally granted only by the Court of Chancery commonly, but not quite solely, to an action from continuing that action, if there was an equit able, though not a legal defence thereto. By the Judicature Act of 1873, all the powers of the High Court received full power to grant injunctions According to their purpose, injunctions are either restr ict ive, restraining, or mandatory, as to clear by order restr ict ive injunctions (Prohibitions, temporary ad interim) or perpetual (permanent) (In Nc Law, the equivalent of a restrictive injunction is an INTERDICT.)

† Some of the Inns of Chancery and of Court derive their specific names from those of noblemen or persons of quality, whose residence or property they formerly were, and from whom they were at first often rented It has hence been sometimes assumed that the term inn here meant originally 'the town house or residence of such nobleman or gentleman, e g that 'Lincoln's Inn' meant originally 'the Earl of Lincoln s town house' but there is no evidence that inn ever had any such specific sense (as distinct from its general sense of 'habitation, lodging, house'), some it, and no proof that any of these houses have the name hospitium or inn, until it was actually the hospitium or hostel of a body of students.

'from within', but in late OE. there remained little or no distinction between innan and inne as adverbs, the main difference being that inne was only an adv., while innan was both adv. and prep. A few examples of innan as prep. are found in 12th c., and innan adv. occurs in Hatton Gospels and Lavamon. Inna prep. in Lamb. Hom. may be an error for innan or inne. But the ordinary early ME. form for both adv. and prep. was inne, frequent in northern writings of 12–14th c. It is very rare in the Kentish of Shoreham and the Ayenbite, in which the prep. is regularly ine. In northern works, from Cursor Mundi onwards, and in Midland works after the time when final -e became mute, inne (ynne) appears to be merely an occasional spelling of in.]

The stem of the word evidently represents L. sig-illum little sign, figure, or token, seal (dim of signum sign, mark taken), whence OF seel, Eng SEAL, but the origin of the prefix in in the Teutonic forms is obscure, since no Lat or med L insigillum appears. Franck (Bijdr. Nederduitsche Taal- en Letterk. 1880) suggests that it may have been taken over in some way from L insigne 'mark, sign, used also in med L. in sense 'seal'. In the verb, the prefix raises less difficulty, a med L. insigillare actually occurs (though sometimes as a rendering of OE inseglian), and enseeler is common in OF (see INSEAL v.).
